

The Bridge - Video 1

If we were to take a feather pillow and open it up, what would happen? Now let's put the pillow back together. Just put the feathers back. It's hard to find them all; it looks impossible. Once you release these feathers, how do you put them back? They are everywhere! These feathers may never be retrieved, not all of them. They are out there forever.

What if these feathers were the words we say, the words that pass between us? Once we say these words can they be retrieved? Some words are soft and smooth, like feathers; others are heavy and harsh and hurt when they land. Or are they out there in the world, words said in anger, in jest, in love. Words we are proud of, words we are ashamed of. Once we let them go can we take them back? Can we stuff them back into the pillow? Maybe some, but most of our words float and drift, or hide in plain sight for others to see forever.
